CQ's Guide to Current American Government is a timely collection of the best congressional quarterly reporting as published during the past six months in the CQ Weekly and related CQ publications. The articles are arranged in four sections: Elections, Institutions, Politics and Public Policy, and Foundations of American Government. Articles were chosen to complement American government courses with the following special reports: Homeland Security, President Bush's efforts in the fight against terrorism, the tensions between Congress and Bush over who decides on war, the role of the branches in both war and foreign policy, the 2002 elections for control of Congress. Ideal for both specific research and general reading, the articles provide up-to-date reporting and analyses of current issues and controversies.

Over the past three decades, governments at the local, state, and federal levels have undertaken a wide range of bold innovations, often in partnership with nongovernmental organizations and communities, to try to address their environmental and natural resource management tasks. Many of these efforts have failed. Innovations, by definition, are transitory. How then can we establish new practices that endure? Todd A. Steelman argues that the key to successful and long-lasting innovation must be a realistic understanding of the challenges that face it. She examines three case studies: land management in Colorado, watershed management in West Virginia, and timber management in New Mexico, and reveals specific patterns of implementation success and failure. Steelman challenges conventional wisdom about the role of individual entrepreneurs in innovative practice; she highlights the institutional obstacles that impede innovation and its longer-term implementation while offering practical insight in how enduring change might be achieved.
