John Locke's essay concerning human understanding is among the most important books in philosophy ever written. It is also a difficult work dealing with many themes including the origin of ideas, the extent and limits of human knowledge, the philosophy of perception, and religion and morality. This volume is original in that it focuses on the last two of these topics and provides a clear and insightful survey of these overlooked aspects of Locke's best-known work. Four eminent Locke scholars present authoritative discussions of Locke's view on the ethics of belief, personal identity, free will, and moral theory. Contributors include John Passmore (Australian National University), Harold Noonan (Birmingham University), Vere Chappell (University of Massachusetts Amherst), and Daniel Flage (James Madison University).

Excerpt from an essay concerning human understanding with the notes and illustrations of the author and an analysis of his doctrine of ideas. Also questions on Locke's essay for the understanding. Like the eye judging of objects only by its own sight cannot but be pleased with what it discovers, having less regret for what has escaped it because it is unknown. Thus he who has raised himself above the alms basket and not content to live lazily on scraps of begged opinions, sets his own thoughts on work to find and follow truth will whatever he lights on not miss the hunter's satisfaction. Every moment of his pursuit will reward his pains with some delight and he will have reason to think his time not ill spent even when he cannot much boast of any great acquisition.
