this paper examines the risk factors associated with fiscal costs of systemic banking crises using cross country data we differentiate between immediate direct fiscal costs of government intervention e g recapitalization and asset purchases and overall fiscal costs of banking crises as proxied by changes in the public debt to gdp ratio we find that both direct and overall fiscal costs of banking crises are high when countries enter the crisis with large banking sectors that rely on external funding have leveraged non financial private sectors and use guarantees on bank liabilities during the crisis the better quality of banking supervision and the higher coverage of deposit insurance help however alleviate the direct fiscal costs we also identify a possible policy trade off costly short term interventions are not necessarily associated with larger increases in public debt supporting the thesis that immediate intervention may be actually cost effective over time using bank specific data on u s bank claims on individual foreign countries since the mid 1980s this paper 1 characterizes the size and portfolio diversification patterns of the u s banks engaging in foreign lending and 2 econometrically explores the determinants of fluctuations in u s bank claims on a broad set of countries u s bank claims on latin american and asian emerging markets and on industrialized countries are sensitive to u s macroeconomic conditions when the united states grows rapidly there is substitution between claims on industrialized countries and claims on the united states the pattern of response of claims on emerging markets to u s conditions differs across banks of different sizes and across emerging market regions moreover unlike u s bank claims on industrialized countries we find that claims on emerging markets are not highly sensitive to local country gdp and interest rates
