Care of older people is a major issue in the UK crossing the boundaries between emotion practical issues and economics yet many current concerns and much conventional planning are based on outdated assumptions or misunderstandings about the nature of ageing. Woodward and Kartupelis work to shatter these myths to create new and more useful models for our society drawing on recent research. The book zeroes in on the nature of interpersonal relationships their critical effect and the factors which affect their formation. The book has been inspired by the extensive work undertaken by both authors in the field of promoting the spiritual wellbeing of older people in the UK and brings together a diversity of expertise to propose a revolutionary new approach based on nurturing particular types of relationship. Stimulating and eminently readable this key text will play a vital role in reimagining care for the elderly and recognising the full potential of our older population.

This book explores the concept of relational care what it feels like for older people and for carers why it makes life happier and how those involved in residential or community care can make it work. Relational care is gaining traction as its benefits to individuals and society become recognised. This accessible book based on real life models and in depth interviews explores fresh ways that relational care can be facilitated in a variety of settings. It looks at practice in terms of team management support for care workers technology design and architecture intergenerational and multidisciplinary models and their implications for resilience wellbeing policy and future funding. Chapters are arranged by theme and provide descriptions learning points and resources for each model as well as incorporating a wealth of interviews giving insights into the lived experience of relational care. This is a lively book full of realistic ideas and information for everyone who wants to find out more about access or implement the best in care the best for older people their families care workers management and society.

Developing appropriate responses to an ageing population is recognized by policy makers throughout the developed world as a top priority as is the vital contribution made by family caregivers. However cultural demographic and organizational differences between countries have encouraged diverse patterns of response to this common challenge. This book provides a systematic cross cultural analysis of contemporary patterns and future trends in all major countries of the European Union. Additional interest is provided by including Poland emerging from the post communist block as the country at the forefront for joining the European Union. The book should be useful to European policy makers and academics involved in studying the health and social care needs of older people and the capacity contribution and needs of family caregivers who provide care to older people. The book is also relevant for policy makers and researchers in other countries mostly in North America and Australia who wish to study European approaches to supporting older people and family caregivers.
